Research Interests

My research focuses on understanding the roots of language acquisition, by studying speech perception in infancy, the mechanisms by which native speech sound categories are acquired, and how speech perception supports early word learning and other facets of language acquisition. The work is positioned within a cascading critical/sensitive period perspective, which involves broad collaboration. In my lab we study infants from hours after birth up to toddler-hood using behavioral, electrophysiological (ERP), and non-invasive optical neural imaging using near-infrared spectroscopy (NIRS). We study infants growing up in different language environments, infants growing up bilingual, and infants with, or at risk for, developmental disabilities. Adult studies focus on speech perception and lexical processing of both spoken language and visual speech, and involve behavioral and neuroimaging studies. Increasingly, our focus is much more contextualized, studying speech perception development as a multisensory, multimodal activity embedded in a social-cultural context. This research would not have been possible without the exceptional graduate students (25 to date) and postdoctoral fellows (31 including those current) I have supervised.
